Complete Market Reports Corrected Each Day Giving the Wholesale Prices of Commodities, Farm Produce and Vegetables.

Portland, July 24.—Shortage is threatened in the supply of watermelons, as the result of extremely hot weather in the interior valleys of California. Several cars of good melons are said to be on their way to Portland at this time, but the arrivals hereafter are expected to be damaged more or less by the scorching heat.

The melon crop of Southern Oregon is said to be badly damaged by melon worms this season, and so a short supply is also predicted from that portion of the state.

The supply of butter is smaller from day to day, as a result of the pastures of the northwest drying up, and dealers think an advance in price quite likely this week.

Never before in the history of Portland has the demand for California produce been so heavy, according to the pioneer merchants of the city.

Soekyes salmon are in large supply from Puget sound, and the price of chinook salmon has declined in consequence.

Hood River tomatoes are in good supply at a dollar per box.
